Cumulative Data

Number of teams participating	409
Complete rosters retrieved	390 (95%)
Rosters sought	19
Incomplete scores sought	8 for men, 5 for women

As indicated above, the team rosters listed below are not complete, particularly in the early years of the Paralympics and the Gold Cup. The authors hope that the publication of this list of teams and players will encourage federations of the International Wheelchair Basketball Federation (IWBF) to search their records in order to add the names of missing players and coaches in a subsequent publication. We apologize for the numerous omissions and for the errors in spelling to certain names. This is due to missing documentation or errors in spelling on documents we obtained. During our editing of this work, in March 2009 and following, we were fortunate to receive some names of players that we had previously had no success in obtaining. We extend our gratitude to Dr. Ian Brittain, Paralympic historian, for providing the names of starting-5s for each competing nation in the 1960 Paralympics, as well as some missing scores. It is hoped that readers will help complete the list of teams.

Additions or corrections to team lists may be addressed to armandthiboutot@aol.com. Additions of names of players and coaches must be accompanied by documentation, which may also be sent via conventional mail to:

1960 Paralympic Games - Men (Rome, Italy)

Organization

The Paralympic Games held in Rome just six days after the Olympic Games closed on September 12, enjoyed the use of only a few of the Olympic facilities. The athletes were quartered in inaccessible buildings in the original Olympic Village; consequently, they had to be lifted up long flights of stairs by able-bodied persons. Basketball was played on outdoor courts adjacent to the Village called the Tre Fontane Sports Centre.

It was one of nine sports performed following the rules of the International Stoke Mandeville Games Federation. Dr. Ludwig Guttmann, medical director of Stoke Mandeville Hospital in England, was president of the Games. His name became synonymous with the Paralympic games and the sports conducted thereafter, although mistakenly to the sport of wheelchair basketball which is acknowledged to be a purely American invention.

The competitions were divided into two classes based on spinal-cord dysfunction: Class A for athletes with complete lesions, and Class B for those with incomplete lesions. This was a decision arrived at by the medical personnel connected with the games. Thus, there were two separate gold medals awarded in the competitions. Both classes were won by the U.S.

With a longer tradition of competition in the sport, the Americans played in wheelchairs that were more suitably designed for wheelchair basketball and which gave them a distinct advantage in terms of speed and maneuverability. A total of 16 teams representing 10 countries took part in basketball. Sponsorship of the Paralympics came from the Italian National Institute for Insurance (INAIL) and the Italian Olympic Committee (CONI).

1964 Paralympic Games - Men (Tokyo, Japan)

Organization

With the visibly strong support of the Japanese government, the second Paralympic Games were held using some of the same facilities as the Olympic Games, held one month earlier. The teams were housed in the Yoyogi Olympic Village where ramps were installed for wheelchair access at the ground level of two-story buildings. There were no internal elevators to the second floors.

For the second successive Paralympics, the basketball competitions were held outdoors, albeit on a wooden surface. The two courts were located adjacent to the National Gymnasium Annex. As in 1960, there were two separate competitions: one for complete lesions, Class A; the other for incomplete lesions, Class B. Four countries entered teams in both competitions: the U.S., Great Britain, Israel and Japan. There were 12 nations participating.

Wheelchair basketball in its international version was governed by the ISMGF, so the decisions made in regard to the form of the Paralympic competitions were dictated by its self-appointed president, Dr. Ludwig Guttmann, and his staff members from the hospital at Stoke Mandeville. Both competitions in the Tokyo Paralympics were conducted as round-robin affairs with medals and places awarded on the basis of the final standings. All games were played in the space of four days.

A large portion of the games' cost was underwritten by Sun Industries which employed a large number of individuals with disabilities in the manufacture of Tupperware products.

1968 Paralympic Games - Men (Tel Aviv, Israel)

Organization

The Games in Israel represented a hiatus in Dr. Ludwig Guttmann's plans to hold the Paralympics in the same city as the Olympic Games. In this case, Israel stepped forward to organize the games after Mexico defaulted because of government disinterest in the project. The Games became part of the 20th anniversary celebration of the country's founding. The highly effective Tournament Committee was chaired by Mr. Eliahu Amiel.

Progress in basketball was made when the International Stoke Mandeville Games Federation decided to consolidate the separate competitions for complete and incomplete lesions into one competition of 5 classes. The 5 players on court could not exceed a maximum of 12 points.

Teams were housed in the Olympic Village-like facilities used for the annual international B'nai Brith Games in suburban Ramat Gan, Tel Aviv. They were bused across town to the Spivak Recreation Center for the Disabled where the basketball competitions were held on an outdoor court. Matches were also contested at the Ohel Shem High School in Ramat Gan.

Another advance was made with the organizing committee's decision to hold a women's competition. Countries were invited on site to enter teams, creating a five-team, round-robin competition won by Israel.

Four thousand partisan spectators saw the men's game; they inspired the Israeli team on to a 47-37 victory over the favorite U.S. Spectators who couldn't get into the stadium climbed onto the roofs of nearby buildings and even risked perching in trees to see the action. It was a memorable night for the young nation capped by the appearance of Moshe Dayan, the national defense minister and hero of the Six-Day War. Dayan presented the championship trophy to the victors.

1972 Paralympic Games - Men (Heidelberg, Germany)

Organization

Because the housing for the Munich Olympic Games was committed to private use immediately following those competitions, the organizers of the Paralympic Games were forced to choose an alternate site - the University of Heidelberg. There, in the recently constructed National Gymnasium, nine men's teams competed in Division I and 10 in Division II. They all played over a 7-day period to decide the gold medal winners. It was the first Paralympic basketball tournament played entirely indoors. The gold medal game between the United States and defending Paralympic champions Israel was played before a capacity crowd in the large gymnasium of the Federal Sports Center. It was also the last competition governed directly by the International Stoke Mandeville Games Federation's Technical Committee. A year later, the Subsection for Basketball came into being and the sport thereafter began to govern itself in the development of rules, regulations, and international competitions.

The Games were sponsored by the federal government and the Government of the Land Baden-Wurttemberg and held under the aegis of the DVS (Deutscher Versehrten Sportsverband).

1976 Paralympic Games - Men (Etobicoke, Ontario, Canada)

Organization

For reasons of government funding and timing, the 5th Paralympic Games were organized in Etobicoke, a suburb of Toronto, instead of Montreal where the XXI Olympics were held.

In the municipality's beautiful and expansive 250 acre Centennial Park, the modern, stylish Olympium served as the site for the basketball competitions. A record 21 men's teams. Because of intense interest, tickets for the men's final between Israel and the U.S. were over-subscribed, which brought the organizing committee to install a satellite television screen in the adjacent ice arena. The game was viewed by more than 3,000 spectators seated in the stands there.

1980 Paralympic Games - Men (Arnhem, the Netherlands)

Organization

Arnhem was chosen to host the 6th Paralympic Games because Moscow, host of the 1980 Summer Olympic Games completely ignored the ISMGF's inquiries related to holding the games.

The city's Rhinehall, a cavernous building used principally for fairs and livestock exhibitions was converted into a three-court arena lined with temporary seating to accommodate spectators. Seventeen teams entered the wheelchair basketball tournament. The Basketball Sub-Committee, in accordance with its 1979 decision, ranked the U.S. first, followed by the Netherlands, France, and Israel. The Sub-Committee based these rankings on the positions in which the previous four nations finished at the 1976 Paralympic Games, together with the results of the 1979 Gold Cup Championship. The organizers modified the original Sub-Committee proposal involving a single preliminary round-robin schedule of games by adding a follow-up schedule for the top eight teams, distributing them in two pools. The bottom eight teams played a separate set of matches. Following the initial set of pool play, the teams crossed over to the opposite pool for the Semifinals, the latter leading to the championship and third place for the top four finishers. Little disagreement surfaced with this arrangement because it ensured each team of a minimum of seven matches in the tournament.

The men's gold medal game, won by Israel over the Netherlands, was played before a crowd of more than 3,000, including Princess Margriet. The concrete floor was covered by Taraflex, a newly developed rubberized athletic flooring material which had the undesirable effect of slowing the game down. Air pockets also formed underneath the court to further inhibit players' speed. The U.S. won bronze.
